It is a rare treat when Blizzard presents a panel at GDC. buy wow power leveling This year they had several, one of which was a look back at Cataclysm and what the team had learned in the process of making the expansion. Tom Chilton, buy wow power leveling Lead Producer on the game gave the talk which focused on three main areas that the team felt ran the scope of the changes. Desolace, WestFall and the Talent Tree changes were the highlight of the session, buy wow power leveling showing what the team got wrong, right, and how they felt the new changes really brought the game to a great place for players.

When building out Cataclysm there was a philosophy to improving WoW in several areas. The content from levels 1-60 was aging. cheap wow power leveling The theory of appealing to hardcore players and then ranging out to casual players was also important. Tom called it the Donut theory. Also there needed to be a purging of the core game systems which were becoming too complex. cheap wow gold Tom focused on the idea that they wanted to work with one part old, keeping the core values of the game, one part improved, building on everything they had learned with Lich King, buy wow gold and one part new, creating a great new experience for veteran players. These three pieces became the heart of Cataclysm and were at the center of all the changes that were made.
